Saudi Arabia: Detention of woman human rights defender Samar Badawi

On 30 July 2018, Saudi authorities detained human rights defender Samar Badawi. She has not yet been charged and her whereabouts remain unknown.

Samar Badawi is a human rights defender who has challenged the conservative stance of authorities in Saudi Arabia by advocating for the rights of women to vote and drive. After she was denied registration for the 2011 municipal elections, Samar Badawi filed a Grievances Board lawsuit against the Ministry of Municipal and Rural Affairs. She participated in the 2011–2012 women's driving campaign and has further assisted women drivers with police and court procedures. In 2012, she received the International Woman of Courage Award.

On 30 July, Saudi authorities arrested and detained Samar Badawi in Jeddah and transferred her to an unknown location. She has been repeatedly intimidated and harassed since 2014 due to her human rights activities and was placed under a travel ban on 16 September 2014 in reprisal for her participation at the 27th UN Human Rights Council. The human rights defender was briefly arrested in January 2016 and summoned for interrogation by the Bureau of Investigation in Jeddah in February 2017.

Since May 2018, Saudi authorities have escalated their crackdown on Saudi women human rights defenders. The detention campaign targeted Lujain Al-Hathloul, along with several other human rights defenders and activists who have been campaigning for women's rights.

5. Cease targeting all human rights defenders and bloggers in Saudi Arabia in all circumstances, so that they are able to carry out their legitimate human rights activities without fear of reprisals and free of all restrictions including judicial harassment.
